

I believe the current state of deregulation is a complete disservice to the public. The resulting lack of competition has diluted the airwaves of all creativity, has stifled artistic expression and made it available to only those who "play ball" with the company that owns not only the radio station, but the concert venue, the tv station the outdoor advertising and ticketing mechanism, and made the concept of "news" nothing more than a promotional extension of the ownerships views. God help the artist or person that dissents, lest the corporate structure blacklist them. I would like to see limits on the amount of "media" one company is allowed to control in the marketplace, to continue the "fair" expression of ideas, news and information.
